The institution has a fine-tuned procedure in place to gratify each and every employee while adhering to staff rules and regulations in permissible areas. However, if an employee believes that he has been improperly accommodated or paid in his employment, he may file a grievance and seek restitution.

He or she will file a complaint with his or her immediate senior officer. If he/she does not get a response within 3 days of filing the complaint, he/she will contact the Head of the Department and present a copy of the complaint, which the superior acknowledges. The HOD will take up the case, investigate the issues, and identify a solution within 7 days, which will be reported to the employee. If the HOD cannot resolve the problem within 7 working days, or if the solution reached is not agreeable to the employee, the employee will contact the Principal, who is the chairman of the college's complaints redressal committee. The issue will be discussed in the committee, and a solution will be reached. Within time constraints, the Principal will execute the committee's decision, which is definitive in the college's domain.
